Nazarene response to NAE immigration initiative

The National Association of Evangelicals (NAE) in the USA, an organization in which the Church of the Nazarene holds membership, recently issued a statement on immigration supported by our denomination.

Any statement to which the Church would subscribe must reflect our commitment to the authority of Scripture, the Articles of Faith, the Wesleyan Holiness theological perspective, and our core values. We believe this statement issued by the NAE meets these criteria.

The Church of the Nazarene does not see this as a call for amnesty therefore felt comfortable supporting the NAE statement.

Our response to the needs of humankind is to show the love and compassion of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, while abiding by the laws of each country where the Church of the Nazarene engages in ministry.

Memphis church's film seeks healing in North America's racial hotbed

"Love and forgiveness, that's what it's about." This is how Academy Award winner Louis Gossett, Jr. describes The Grace Card, a movie currently filming in Memphis and a project of the Memphis Calvary Church of the Nazarene. Gossett plays George Wright, a civil rights pioneer and long-time activist minister who provides wisdom and advice to his grandson, Sam, who's chosen to follow in George's ministry footsteps. The problem is, Sam Wright's church is too small and budget-challenged. Sam's a full-time cop on the tough streets of inner city Memphis and also preaching on Sundays.

Landing Gossett to star in the movie is front-page-news in Memphis and a huge leap for faith-based features. Until recently, most Christian movies relied heavily on unknown actors or amateurs, and typically could best be described as "preaching to the choir." The Grace Card's creator David Evans wanted to change that. And he started with the script. "I've been writing and producing live Christian events for nearly 20 years," Evans says. "But I'm an optometrist by trade. I've never made a feature film before. I knew I needed to surround myself with a team that could best bring this vision to life."

Enter veteran screenwriter Howie Klausner. Klausner is a 20-year Hollywood writer and evangelical Christian who wrote Clint Eastwood's Space Cowboys, among other films. Klausner had recently left Los Angeles, relocating to his hometown of Nashville to set up shop as an independent writer/producer. "My mission statement, I guess, is to use my years as a mainstream filmmaker, and help grow the Christian movie up a bit. And I think we're doing just that here."

Evans enlisted Klausner to rewrite his first draft and come on board to produce the film with him.

"We look at this project as Fireproof 2.0," Klausner says with a respectful chuckle. "The Sherwood Baptist guys have opened up a door for all of us, proving that faith-based features can stand up in the marketplace." His point is well taken. Fireproof, the brainchild of Alex and Steven Kendrick, continues to break records as the most successful independent faith-based feature ever. Evans even tapped actor/youth pastor Stephen Dervan to play a comic relief role as a rookie officer. Dervan is best known for playing the hot-sauce-drinking firefighter in Fireproof.

"People want to see name actors, quality production values, and good stories," says Klausner. "And despite conventional Hollywood 'wisdom', the Gospel and grace is just as real and relevant a movie theme as it was 2000 years ago."

The Grace Card doesn't feel benign, safe, or "preaching to the choir." This is a tough and gritty story of racial reconciliation wrapped in a police and family drama. A personal tragedy has left officer Mac McDonald, played by veteran screen actor Michael Joiner, a bitter, angry soul. He blames his downward spiral on minorities, "the system," and God Himself. It all comes to a boil when Mac is paired with a new partner - African-American pastor/cop Sam Wright, played by Memphis' own Michael Higgenbottom. When the unthinkable happens to Mac, his only lifeline is grace, offered by the God he's abandoned, through the gift of a man he can barely stand.

Lou Gossett's character, George Wright, sums up Evans' and Klausner's philosophy in one of the film's flagship scenes: "Jesus worked right here - in the streets. Grace... is tough stuff."

Evans wants the story to motivate Christians in his community to tackle the city's race problems and work toward healing. The film has already made an impact on the town. "One of our most important scenes takes place in a predominantly black Memphis church," says Evans. "Without giving the plot away, actors, crew, and hundreds of extras from both black and white congregations were hugging each other and crying because of the subject matter."

Evans' church, Memphis Calvary Church of the Nazarene, usually puts on an ambitious Easter program, but opted to support the film instead this year. Church members help with everything from carpentry to catering on the set. Evans chose to balance the crew with many local and Hollywood-based professionals. Veterans from hit films such as Walk the Line, The Rainmaker, Fireproof, Scream 2, and Bedtime Stories, are on set in this evangelistic endeavor.

"It's a unique combination of volunteer and professional crew," Memphis Deputy Film Commissioner Sharon Fox O'Guin told the Memphis Commercial Appeal. "I've rarely seen such passion and dedication to a project."

It all goes back to Klausner's vision to "grow up" Christian films.

"Christian audiences are, by nature, very forgiving. Maybe it's just because so few films coming out of Hollywood reflect the values we hold dear, they're turning out in droves. But that doesn't give us license to be lazy. We don't honor God, and we won't serve His passion for his people with spotty production values, vanilla writing, or bad acting. We gotta bring our best, we have to boldly put it out there, and let God take it from there."

That is precisely what David Evans and Howie Klausner are doing on location in Memphis, Tennessee. The film will complete production later this month and be in theaters Spring 2010.

Faith for water in Swaziland

For many people across Africa, life revolves around the daily challenge of finding enough clean water for basic needs. This is the case in many places in Swaziland, especially the rural areas where large water sources have not been developed.

In July of 2008 a global outreach team from Bethany First Church of the Nazarene (BFC) in Oklahoma, traveled to Sitsatsaweni, Swaziland, a small village near the Nazarene College of Theology in Siteki, to continue work on the new nurse's housing at the Nazarene clinic. This is one of the 17 clinics throughout the country that is connected to Raleigh Fitkin Memorial (RFM) Hospital in Manzini. One team member looked up the hill at the primary school and saw a tall windmill that was not turning. He wandered up the hill to inspect it, and was told by teachers and community members that the windmill water pump was broken but the water source beneath it was still strong. The idea of water being just below the surface and yet not accessible to the needy community created a holy discontent in this team member; he began to research water systems in the country and looked for professionals that could assess and possibly remedy this issue in this community. He met a contractor who gave information and a quote for installing a solar-based water pump system. Team and church members raised the necessary funds to hire the contractor and a solar-based system that brings water at no cost to the school and the clinic was installed into the bore hole.

Church members continued to dream and pray about the water needs in Swaziland. In March 2009 they returned to Swaziland to assess the other 16 Nazarene clinics and surrounding communities. Although the cost to install a solar pump at the remaining clinics was high, it did not deter them. They felt led by God to continue on this path, a path that God was leading others down as well. The Coca-Cola Foundation was looking for a group that had a vision and plan to bring water to Swaziland. Jim and Colleen Copple, BFC members and grant writers for Nazarene Compassionate Ministries, Inc. (NCMI), connected Coca-Cola, NCM Swaziland, NCMI, Swaziland's RFM Nazarene hospital, and BFC. The plan that had already been developed by BFC's assessment in March became the basis for the proposal to Coca-Cola.

Coca-Cola awarded a grant to NCMI in July 2009. Twelve Nazarene clinics and communities will receive a solar water system with associated water harvesting and sanitation systems during the remainder of 2009 and early 2010. Each system is to serve the clinic, the school, and church on the mission station, and the community, providing water to gardens operated by HIV support groups initiated by Swaziland's Nazarene HIV/AIDS Task Force. The project is being implemented by NCM-Swaziland under the leadership of Beauty Makhubela, NCM-Swaziland director, Anna Mdluli, community mobilization coordinator, and Sabelo Dlamini, training officer. The first phase of the project began in mid-August, with the first seven sites scheduled for completion by the end of November.

Recently, Richard Zanner, regional director emeritus for Africa and chairman of the board for Helping Hands Africa (HHA), Cosmos Mutowa, NCM/HHA Africa regional coordinator, and Anton and Carolyn Hol, Mission Corps volunteers for NCM Africa, visited some of the sites closest to completion in Swaziland.

At the garden site near the small town of Luve, the HIV/AIDS support group in charge of the garden met them to express their thanks for the water that is so badly needed. They pointed beyond the garden to the surrounding mountains and community and said, "These people are all going to get water because of this pump." Swaziland District Superintendants Simeon Mahlalela, Timothy Dlamini, and Philemon Dlamini, prayed for the well and for the community.

Clean water for several communities in Swaziland has become a reality because of the strong faith exhibited by many; the faith of one team member who felt a holy urgency about water, the faith of a team who prayed around a broken windmill, and whose continued prayers multiplied the supply of water throughout the country. And it was the faith of those who were able to see God's hand in the small plans of one church as well as the large plans of an outside donor. Stepping out in faith is one way God uses us to bring glory to Himself and to His Church. Sometimes the glory of God comes in the tangible form of clean water in the name of Jesus - the living water.

NPH exceeds Thanksgiving offering goal

On November 12, Nazarene Publishing House (NPH) held its annual Thanksgiving Chapel for all employees and invited guests. Joe Colaizzi from the Kansas City Rescue Mission (KCRM) was the invited speaker for the morning and presented a simple but powerful message of thanks to God for His many blessings. Jason Sivewright of Barefoot Ministries, along with other talented NPH employees, led in dynamic praise and worship. Many employees commented on the very tender presence of God in the time of worship, through the message, and through partaking of communion.

The service concluded with NPH President Hardy Weathers stating that the 2009 NPH Thanksgiving offering would be to provide meals for those seeking a hot Thanksgiving dinner at KCRM. He stated the goal for the offering this year would be to feed 500 people. To do this, NPH would need an offering of $940. This lofty goal was approximately double the amount of any previous Thanksgiving offering that NPH had received.

NPH is now giving praise to God, because as of Tuesday, November 17, NPH will provide funds to KCRM in an amount that exceeds its goal of $940 with a total gift of $1,461. This offering is triple the funds of NPH's largest Thanksgiving offering. NPH will be able to provide exactly 777 meals for KCRM through the generosity of the NPH family.

As NPH continues to seek to provide "innovative Biblical solutions for the changing church," it also seeks to ask the question from Luke 10:29, "and who is my neighbor?" In both the mission and the following question, the resolve of NPH employees is to serve the church and love their neighbor.

MNU first university approved to provide Theraplay® coursework

MidAmerica Nazarene University (MNU) became the first university in the nation to be approved to teach Theraplay® in its Play Therapy Certificate Program during the week of November 8. Theraplay is a branch of play therapy (a form of mental health counseling) created by the founders of the Theraplay® Institute in Chicago, Illinois. The approach is used to treat children with attachment issues, trauma, developmental delays, or behavioral problems such as opposition.

According to Gayle Christensen, executive director of The Theraplay Institute, MNU was chosen for approval in part because of the university's reputation as an Association of Play Therapy (APT) Approved University Center.

The Theraplay Institute, founded in 1971, sets international standards for Theraplay treatment and training. The Institute maintains a certification program, and only certified Theraplay trainers are qualified to provide Theraplay training that is officially recognized by The Theraplay Institute.

Adding Theraplay to the curriculum at MNU gives MNU therapy students a stronger base for their practice, according to Rebeca Chow, MNU's play therapy program coordinator.

"As one of three major branches of play therapy, Theraplay is something therapists should understand," Chow says. "This will expose them to another treatment option, especially beneficial for those clients with attachment and relationship disorders."

"As an APT Approved Center we know that MidAmerica Nazarene University has a certain level of quality," Christensen said. "Since the MNU faculty includes Theraplay Certified Trainer Marlo Winstead, they [MNU] have met our requirements for partnership in offering Theraplay training."

The Theraplay Institute's long-term goal is to get the training into more universities because it is one of the core elements for play therapists. "We're so happy the first university that we could approve was MidAmerica Nazarene University," she said.

More than 80 students have enrolled in the Play Therapy Certificate Program at MNU since its inception in 2004. Students must hold a master's degree and be licensed in a mental health field. Classes are held one weekend per month or online and the certificate can be completed in one year. Enrollment is limited and the next session begins in January 2010.

For more information on the Certificate in Play Therapy Program at MNU contact Rebeca Chow at (913) 971-3710, richow@mnu.edu, or visit www.mnu.edu/playtherapy.

Lay leadership in action

Emmitt Ballard encountered Christ in an unexpected place. He shares, "I found God when I went to a pizza party. I went for the pizza but I got so much more." For the last 15 years, Ballard has called Glasgow, Kentucky's Trinity Church of the Nazarene home. It is there he has not only been discipled, but is also discipling others. As a church board member, assistant to the pastor, and Continuing Lay Training (CLT) coordinator, he has enthusiastically assumed several leadership roles. For Ballard, his ministry in the local church is motivated by a love for God and his church family.

Ballard's love for God and desire to serve others bleeds into all other areas of his life. As a former franchise owner of a well known sandwich shop, he saw his business as an extension of his ministry by shepherding his employees. In fact, he used the opportunity being a franchise owner gave him, to hire an individual right out of the prison system so that he could disciple this young Christian.

Recently after a Sunday evening service, Ballard's family was sitting together at home reading a passage from Genesis. While learning from one another they began to talk about the gospel and without any prompting, his six-year old daughter prayed and accepted Christ. With a contagious excitement, Ballard recently contacted the CLT office and shared the news of his daughter's decision to accept Christ.

Like many people, Ballard and his family have come upon challenging times as a result of the global economic crisis. However, through it all he continues to keep his focus on Christ. While he admits things have not been easy, he is quick to confess he would not make it without Christ.

Continuing Lay Training hosts a lay minister certification program that works in tandem with the local church to provide education and ministry accountability for laity. The mentor-driven, educational component of this process is provided by CLT at www.DiscipleshipPlace.org. It is through this web site that Emmitt Ballard of Trinity Church of the Nazarene in Glasgow, Kentucky, began communicating with the CLT office about his life story and passion for ministry. As a certified lay minister since December 2008, Ballard has completed several online courses.

For those individuals who may have an interest in learning more about Scripture, doctrine, and theology, check out the many free, online courses available at www.DiscipleshipPlace.org.

Authorities: Three dead in Nevada Medevac crash

Reno, Nevada

The Associated Press/EMS1.com

Investigators said the pilot of a medical helicopter issued a mayday moments before the aircraft crashed into a hilly area north of Reno near the Nevada-California state line early Saturday, November 14.

All three crew members - the pilot, flight nurse and paramedic - were killed.

The helicopter, an Aerospatiale AS350, had dropped off a patient at a Reno hospital and was returning to its base in Susanville, Calif., when it crashed around 2 a.m. Saturday, according to Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Ian Gregor.

The helicopter was operated by Mountain Lifeflight out of Susanville. The company confirmed the loss of all three crew members aboard the helicopter. Mountain Lifeflight issued a statement Saturday afternoon identifying the pilot as James Bradshaw, 39, the flight nurse as Clinton Reger, 40, and Christopher Ritz, 37, as the paramedic.

While Brad Reger wasn't aboard the helicopter that evening, his nephew, Clinton Reger, was killed in the crash. According to Susanville pastor Joe Sturgeon, Brad Reger has been heavily involved in medical mission projects with the Susanville church in the Ukraine and the Philippines, and there are close ties between the Mountain Lifeflight team and the extended Susanville Church family. Prayer is requested for the families of the victims, Brad Reger, and the Susanville Church in this time of loss. Prayer is also requested for Pastor Sturgeon, who is among those ministering to and counseling the remaining emergency team members involved with Mountain Lifeflight.

Churches' mission: Pray, play together

Brighton, Michigan

(Daily Press & Argus)

Skateboarding is not a crime; just ask Brighton, Michigan, Nazarene Church family pastor Tim Wessel, whose church has taken the phrase "holy roller" to the extreme.

With an indoor skate park, video arcade, indoor cafe, and a paintball course, "The Naz" has also taken an unconventional approach to connecting with area youth, making it one of several Livingston County churches that reach out by rolling out recreational opportunities...

...The skate park opened about seven years ago after throngs of teenagers began skating on church property. Skaters began interacting with pastors and soon, ramps were brought in to turn the parking lot into a concrete playground. More than 8,000 students have taken advantage of the skate park, which is free for anyone who attends a weekly skate ministry. Otherwise, it costs $5 per day to skate.

Nazarene church volunteers fill boxes with goodies for troops

Gainesville, Georgia

(Gainesville Times)

Army Sgt. Daniel Bowers knows what it is like to open a care package from 7,000 miles away while deployed in a combat zone.

During his time serving in Afghanistan, the cardboard boxes stuffed with letters, reading materials, sweets, toiletries and other items served as yet another motivator for the fighting forces overseas, Bowers acknowledged Saturday.

"You get a package like that, and it's like Christmas every week," Bowers said. "It makes your day. It puts a smile on your face after all the stuff you see."

Bowers was the guest of honor at a rally held Saturday at Gainesville, Georgia's First Church of the Nazarene, where about 100 people came to see photos of the soldiers overseas, listen to patriotic music and, most importantly, put together care packages for more than 50 troops from all branches of the armed forces.

GMC Flags of the Nations: Suriname

Since September 1, 2009, each week the Church of the Nazarene's Global Ministry Center (GMC) proudly flies a flag of one of the many nations in which the denomination is present in ministry. Leaders were invited to send a national flag to be flown at the GMC alongside the flag of the United States*. The national flags rotate weekly, and photos of them raised are sent to the church leaders of that country.

This week: Suriname

The Church of the Nazarene officially entered Suriname in 1984.

Suriname had a population of 475,996 in 2008. That same year, Suriname reported six Churches of the Nazarene, all of which had been officially organized. Suriname has 592 total members.

Suriname is a Phase 1 district on the Caribbean Region.

According to the Caribbean Region, the first Nazarenes gathered in a cottage prayer meeting in the Suriname capital city of Paramaribo in August of 1982. The first church was officially organized during a charter signing ceremony in October 1984. Eighteen people signed the charter. In March 1985, the second congregation was formed in Liverno. This congregation held services in English but Sunday School in Dutch.

Global praise reports and prayer requests

This week's praise reports and prayer requests from Nazarene Missions International, JESUS Film Harvest Partners, and NCN News include:

PRAISES

JESUS Film - Guatemala

"I was a soldier," said Carlos in Guatemala. "I was arrogant and did not believe in a forgiving God. I was lost in alcohol and hit my kids without reason. I felt like nobody could make me change. Today, I came alone to see the movie. The power of the message in the JESUS Film touched me. I felt God saying, 'Carlos, today I want to shake you up.' When the pastor began inviting people to accept the Lord, there was a fight going on within me. When he said a prayer for people with hard hearts, I went forward slowly. When I got to the front I was crying. Thank you God for being so good to me!"

JESUS Film - Solomon Islands

"The Lord spoke His word to me," said Titus in the Solomon Islands. "I did not go to school and do not know how to read and write. The pastor's wife turned on the Proclaimer for me to listen to each morning. The Proclaimer was in Pijin (my language) making it easy to listen to it. By listening to it every day, the Lord spoke to me through His Word. When I listened to John 3:16, it really blessed me to know about God's love for me and that He died on the cross for me. From that moment, I decided to give my life to Jesus. I was only there for one week. In that week, I gave my life to Jesus."

JESUS Film - Sri Lanka

"His skin problem was gone," said a team member in Sri Lanka. "When we returned to follow up with the people of the area, one man told us, 'I was there when you showed the film last time. I was just watching the film for the sake of watching. When Jesus started healing the sick I thought in my heart, can he heal me from my sickness? Is it too difficult for him to heal me? I was standing there for a while, then I went home. After two days, I noticed my skin problem was gone. God healed me!' We thank God for healing him. We are teaching him more about Christ."

SNU Archives honors C. Paul Gray

The new archives reading room in Southern Nazarene University's Fred Floyd Archives was dedicated during the university's 100th homecoming on November 7 and named in honor of C. Paul Gray, long time historian and archivist. He and Fred Floyd collected materials for the archives for decades and, in 1986, the Fred Floyd Archives was chartered.

During the summer of 2009, the Fred Floyd Archives was moved from a small third floor space to a much larger and more accessible location on the first floor of the SNU Library. A grant from the Oklahoma Department of Libraries provided funds for archival storage supplies, and the former bound periodicals rooms were converted into archival storage, workrooms, an office, and the new C. Paul Gray Reading Room. With the addition of the City of Bethany's archives to the collection, it now contains more than 7,000 items preserving the history of Bethany, Southern Nazarene University, and the South Central Region of the Church of the Nazarene.

After a welcome by Library Director Arlita Harris and brief history by current archivist Marion Snowbarger, dedication messages were brought by Brad Moore and Loren Gresham, board president and president of Southern Nazarene University, respectively. Approximately 100 people, including Gray and his family and the children of Fred Floyd, attended the ceremony.

SNU launches new online MBA in health care program

Southern Nazarene University is launching a new online master in business administration in health care (MBA-HC) program. The program is designed to reach professionals who desire to pursue a career in management in a health care organization or are currently working for health care organizations and desire to increase their effectiveness as managers and/or professionals.

The MBA-HC curriculum is uniquely designed to provide skills needed to be successful managers in the health care industry. The program is based on the proven one-night-a-week program currently offered on the main campus in Bethany, and in Del City and Tulsa, Oklahoma.

The online MBA-HC offers a combination of the best in general business theory and practice with specific knowledge and skills health care professionals need to lead their organizations effectively. The accelerated online program is a 40 credit hour program that can be completed in 19 months; the program consists of nine traditional MBA courses (27 credit hours), four MBA-HC courses (12 credit hours) designed specifically to address health care issues and problems, and a seminar, "Current Issues in Health Care" (one credit hour). Students will enter and progress through the program with a cohort, taking courses in sequential order and completing the program with the same group within 19 months.

"With online education growing in popularity and the health care industry expanding, Southern Nazarene University is able to connect with people from various health care related professions across Oklahoma and in other states," said Jeff Seyfert, assistant director of Graduate Studies in Management. "As with most health care professionals, they work long hours and sometimes on the weekends, which makes it difficult to attend a traditional on-site class. Now with an online MBA-HC program, students can work from their personal computers anywhere and at any time of the day."

Start date for the online MBA-HC is February 20, 2010. To learn more about this program or RSVP to attend an upcoming information seminar, visit www.snu.edu/mba-health-care.

NNU School of Nursing awarded $87,000 grant

Northwest Nazarene University (NNU) received an $87,000 grant from the John H. & Orah I. Brandt Foundation for equipment in the new nursing lab named in their honor. Funds will provide additional equipment that will assist in providing "real-life patient care scenarios" for students in the School of Nursing. Further, the Brandt Foundation will help to equip NNU nursing graduates with a higher level of hands-on expertise before they encounter live-patient scenarios in the real world.

The Brandt Foundation is committed to actively supporting private and public education and other community endeavors. In the year 2009 alone, the Foundation granted a total of $598,000 in assistance to Boise State University, the Biblical Studies Center, Love Inc., Nampa Christian Schools, the Salvation Army, Valley Crisis Center, Boys and Girls Club, the Nampa Syringa House, the Cascade 4-H Camp, and the Freedom Foundation, in addition to Northwest Nazarene University.

"NNU is extremely grateful to the Brandt Foundation for this generous grant," said Joel Pearsall, vice president for University Advancement. "With the recent opening of the Thomas Family Health & Science Center and its expanded space dedicated to training nurses, this equipment will further enhance our ability to train the next generation of nurses."

The Brandt Nursing Lab is adjacent to an additional simulation lab that will house the SimMan, a human-like learning apparatus. As a result of increased space in the newly completed Science Center, the nursing program will be able to offer an expanded use of simulation mannequins in nursing education. The Brandt Foundation grant will fund additional components that complement the use of SimMan and the VitalSim learning apparatus. The simulated environment will facilitate increased learning and skill transfer when students serve patients in today's complex care environment.

Pearsall continued, "In a real way, this gift benefits not only NNU and her students, but the entire [Idaho Treasure] Valley by assisting NNU in sending exceptional nurses out into local hospitals and other healthcare facilities."

ENC Athletics Hall of Fame named for Coach Bradley

In 1994, Eastern Nazarene College (ENC) formally established an Athletics Hall of Fame, inducting just one honoree: Carroll F. Bradley (Class of 1950), a member of ENC's first team to play in intercollegiate competition and the college's longtime athletic director.

For 15 years, Coach Bradley remained ENC's sole Hall of Fame inductee. At the college's recent homecoming celebration, however, he gained some company and another honor, as the college expanded the Hall of Fame to include four new inductees and was given a new name: The Carroll F. Bradley Athletics Hall of Fame.

"We've had a Hall of Fame for a few years, and we thought this Homecoming would be an excellent opportunity to honor the beginning of athletics here at ENC," President Corlis McGee said. "It's a great honor for us to recognize the life Coach Bradley has lived and the lives he has contributed to here at ENC."

In addition to starting and developing the ENC intercollegiate athletics program, Bradley served as both student athletic director and later athletic director for a total of nearly 30 years (1953-1970 and 1982-1994). During those periods, he also coached varsity men's basketball and varsity baseball while serving as an ENC professor and dean of men. Now retired, Bradley lives in Clemson, South Carolina, with his wife, Doris (ENC Class of 1957).

New members inducted into the Carroll F. Bradley Athletics Hall of Fame in 2009 include:

Ron Bradley joins his father in the Carroll F. Bradley Athletics Hall of Fame. The associate head basketball coach at Clemson University in Clemson, South Carolina, Bradley has more than 30 years of collegiate coaching experience, 28 of them at the Division I level. Prior to his hire at Clemson in the summer of 2003, he served as the associate head coach at James Madison University for one season. During his student days at ENC as a varsity basketball player (1968-1973), Bradley scored 2,639 points and averaged 28.4 points per year during his career. He was named an NAIA Honorable Mention All American, was ranked sixth nationally in scoring as a sophomore and 15th as a junior, and was selected by the New York Nets in the American Basketball Association draft in 1972.

Jody Gardner Brown was a triple-sport threat at ENC, playing as a varsity athlete in basketball, soccer, and softball during 1997-2001. As a basketball player, she amassed 1,520 points during her career and helped the team to a conference championship in 2000 and to the NCAA Division 3 "Sweet Sixteen" in playoffs the same year. She carried that expertise on to successive ENC softball teams as coach during 2004-2007. Brown is a former teacher, who now is a full-time mother to Owen. She resides with her husband, Justin, in Bourbonnais, Illinois.

Janet Ranstrom Calhoun competed as an ENC varsity athlete in volleyball and basketball during her student years (1977-1981), graduating with a career volleyball playing record of 102-23 (82%). She and her teammates were Massachusetts State Champions in 1979, winning the EIAIW Regionals the same year. After graduating with a bachelor of science degree, Calhoun was the assistant ENC volleyball coach for six years and head volleyball coach for four years (1992-1996). She was a vital part of coaching or playing in 505 wins during her volleyball career. In 1978 she led her basketball team to a victory in the Massachusetts Intercollegiate Championship with a win over University of Lowell. Calhoun also was the ENC head softball coach for three years (1993-1996).

Steve Shoff was a varsity basketball and varsity soccer player during his ENC career (1969-1973) and holds the ENC record for career soccer goals, with 86 scored. After graduating with a bachelor of arts degree, he coached ENC women's basketball during 1982-1984 and went on to a successful teaching career and coaching high school soccer in the Weymouth, Massachusetts public schools. His teams won three Massachusetts State Championships. Two members of Shoff's team are currently playing professional soccer. His high school soccer camps were so successful that he had long waiting lists to attend. Shoff was elected Massachusetts Soccer Coach of the Year three times. He was twice ranked in the top 20 nationally by the NSCAA, and has been inducted into the Massachusetts Soccer Coaches Hall of Fame.
